

Solo Creator ICP Iterations

- Every SC wants to hit those viral videos, those outlier videos, because they not only increase the views and analytical numbers but also increase the business since their business gets more attention and all, so every SC wants more viral hits; they might have some paid communities, info products, or SaaS, which will automatically grow if they consistently hit the viral videos.
- Creators over here absolutely love the agencies who know what the * they are doing and yeah, this is absolutely like the agencies who know what they are doing—they have experience and they are the best ones out there in the market. These people absolutely like the fact that they're working with the best agency out there, which actually knows what to do. things to focus on and all that stuff and these kinds of creators really, really get happy and excited to work with these kinds of agencies. Who knows what kind of * they are into and what kind of * they are doing

- SC mostly have their info product or some sort of business running usually, and it's a problem that the business is not growing and stuff, which ultimately goes to this problem: the fact that they are not hitting those viral videos, those 1 out of 10 2 out of 10 or 3 out of 10 videos.

If they find someone who can do this for them, they are happy to pay 30, 40, or 20% of their AdSense revenue, because AdSense is one of the smallest source of contribution to a SC income portfolio; most is done through their low-ticket, mid-ticket, and high ticket offers not from Adseen; heck, in fact, you can charge 50-70% as well if you really know what you are doing

- Most SCs understand how YouTube works and stuff. When they matter, maybe a similar agency, like some other YouTube growth agency out there, will do. Most of these agencies are inexperienced; they have no experience running YouTube channels and don't know how metrics work and stuff. Heck, in fact, this noob agency thinks that if you have a high CTR, you are doing good, but a real content creator will understand that high CTR has no link with your doing good; it's always the topic you pick, it's always the packaging you do, it's always the the combination of packaging and your hooks, it's always the structure of your scripts and how viral the topic is and in fact, having a high CTR is not a good thing because it means your video is not getting viral. Most of the viral reviewers 1 million views or 10 million impressions—those have usually below 5% of the center, which is absolutely fine and most of the creators understand this rate: that the more the viral the video is, more the less center you're gonna have and agencies think it's all simple. Youtube Analytics is all simple but in reality Youtube Analytics is just seems like it just numbers but the psychology behind those analytics are way more deeper and most of the agency can't understand this and most of the creators out there do understand this or maybe they don't understand this but at least have an idea that this kind of some basic, basic stuff like more the centered it is, the less better it is and if it's less than 5% and there are a lot of impressions you are doing good And these are some small, small things that creators understand and that these other YouTube growth agencies out there, which are absolutely new and don't know what they are doing, don't understand and there is this gap between these two. Imagine that my creators have such a bad impression of these agencies if they have, like, ever had an II and I contact with them. These agencies are mostly new and started by 15-year-olds, 16-year-olds, or maybe 25-year-olds as well, but mostly, most of them have not experienced what it feels like/how it looks like to actually run a YouTube channel, which is thousands and hundreds and thousands of views and tens and thousands of subscribers. Most of them don't have the experience plus exposure and if they find an agency, someone like me, or something like that, and then I can actually, you know, just resonate with the temperature. I can understand the psychology behind the analytics and all, and these creators are happy to pay like 20-30% of their revenue share, whatever they earn from AdSense only, OK. And in fact, the creator is happy to pay 20-30 or even 50-60% of what he earns from AdSense because this main source of income is way more different, like they got sponsorship, they got their low-ticket, mid-ticket, and high-ticket offers, and AdSense is like really a small contributor to whatever the creator is earning. And they're happy to pay 40-50-30-20 of this kind of percentage of AdSense revenue

- Most of these creators are like misconceptions; maybe they have watched a Reddit thread or something like that the other people are having really bad experiences with other agencies out there, which are absolutely * at what they do but we are different; we are the best one out there. I can guarantee 110% that I am the best one out there and creators actually like this confidence. If the guy has the confidence that he is the best one out there and has, like, done it for himself at the age of 16, all the stuff the creator is going to be happy, and they are willing to give it a shot. Try it out; if it works, then fine; if it doesn't work, it's lesson for the creator

- The contemporary solo content creators, the majority of them, have some sort of high-ticket, mid-ticket, or low-ticket sponsorships out there but the thing is that in order to grow/scale past those plateau numbers which they are hitting we need to change something. We need to change the input in order to get the different output. Most of these creators understand that, OK, you need to change input as true, but how are we going to change the input and how this problem—the fact that if they want to get out of this plateau of numbers and actually grow their low-ticket, mid-ticket, and high-ticket—all of this funnel plus more sponsorships and all that stuff? They need to hit viral videos because these are the things viral videos bring: new audiences, and when new audiences come, we nurture those new audiences, and when we nurture those new audiences, we give them like free stuff or something like that, and we even more unsure of the audience, and after some time, we sell them our low-ticket offer their mid-ticket offer or high-ticket offer so this is the whole process in order to nurture the audience. You need different small content creators. Solo content creators—sorry—actually understand this one particular thing: that if they hit a viral video, this video is spread through the feeds of a lot of different people, a lot of different types of people, so there is a lot of variation of people, a lot of different people coming up to your channel; most of them may leave, but there is going to be a good big chunk of people who are going to be your audience, and you can nurture them. value, then mid-ticket offer and high-ticket offer. In this way, you can just go and scale your business. So yeah, this is the whole game plan and my creator right now, the solo creator, is stuck on this problem: they want to grow their business, and they want to grow their funnel. In order to do that, they need to hit those viral videos because if they do, they're going to get a different variation of audiences and this different variation of audiences will be nurtured by the solo creator to sell some other big stuff. But now the main problem is not growing the business; it's about getting viral videos in order to grow the business so it's kind of linked. The problems are linked but the main problem in mind is the fact that they need to hit some viral videos right now—those 1 out of 10, 2 out of 10, and 3 out of 10 kinds of videos. They need to hit those in order to get those new variations of audiences to nurture them but how the hell are they going to hit this? Because if they know how to hit? They could have hit in it, right? And that's the place where you come and pitch our offer and actually sell them my offer that I can grow your channel and I can get like two or three viral videos to you for sure for 20% or 30% of the actions revenue and they are happy to pay you because they get more from other sources of income; it's not just AdSense. There are a lot of things

- They are spending money on editing the videos; maybe they hired an agency or a freelancer who can edit the video for them, paying him thousands of dollars. But maybe they understand it or maybe they don't understand it but it does not matter. Like, if you pay thousands of dollars for good video editing, if you get your packaging wrong, if you get your topic wrong, if you get your message wrong, or if we get your psychology behind the content wrong. If you got this kind of main thing, which are main Kpis for a while content is wrong, it does not matter how good you edit your video or how good you make your thumbnail or something like that; it will not matter. YouTube is like 70-80% psychology; the rest, 20-30%, is the creative skills, which are done through editing thumbnails, titles, and the storytelling and all that stuff, but 70-80% is psychology. At least four viral videos are psychological. If you don't want to make viral videos, OK, that's fine, but for making viral videos, it's psychology; it's more psychology than using the proper tools or something like that. In fact, the number one creator on earth, MrBeast, doesn't even use, you know, tags on his videos because tags were relevant back in the day, but nowadays maybe most of the content creators understand this or maybe don't understand this but tags are irrelevant right now even without them, you can get those viral heads. It was their existence that was there because back in the day there was no such thing as transcription and all that stuff.

Nowadays, YouTube can just transcribe your whole video and make it go through AI and understand the context, psychology, and what you are providing and all that stuff with the help of AI and can be shown to the right type of audience and all that stuff.

Maybe some content creators understand this but most of them don't really understand this and most of the agencies these content creators may have worked with or have gotten pitch from don't even know this

- Yeah there are Youtubers out there who are little bit knowledgeable about how YouTube algorithms work, how viral topics are picked and all that stuff but the knowledge is minimal and they don't have, like, in-depth psychological knowledge about it and all that stuff and they just think, "Analytics, analytics—those are just numbers and these numbers are not interconnected or something like that; they are just numbers on the screen you just have to improve them." For example, they might have this misconception like many of them have this misconception that if you want to increase your CTR in YouTube videos, you just get better thumbnails but it's actually combination of lot of things; it's whole package. If you want to increase CTR you need to focus on whole package: the thumbnail the title the psychology of the thumbnail, and the psychology psychology of the title. We have to make sure that the thumbnail and title are showing some different different things and not just the same thing, right? And we need to make sure that those are in combination and all, which is actually creating sparking curiosity, which will lead to higher CTR and the majority of the creators out there just think, "If you want to increase your CTR you need to make better thumbnails or hire a person who makes better thumbnails or just hire a freelancer who will do better thumbnails or maybe a higher agency that will do better thumbnails," but that is useless. Like, if your topic is bad, if your packaging is bad, if your title or your psychology is bad, then you are going to fail; the topic of the video is going to fail in the markets of the YouTube and most creators don't understand this. At least majority of them don't understand this; they just think you just have to make better thumbnails but the thing is that psychology is more important You might make one of the best-looking thumbnails out there. It grabs no attention. The psychology is * and plus, the average watch duration from the current highly dependent on the packaging you do and deep insights, which I have which most of these creators don't have and I'm going to fill the gap from situation to the future situation. They just want someone—some creators want someone who can fill the gap between their current situation and the future situation. The current situation is that they are stuck at XYZ views; they are not getting viral videos; they are not going viral; there is no momentum/growth in their channel. The channel is absolutely dry, not in negative way but yeah, they are getting a lot of views; they are getting a lot of views but they hit a plateau. They can't figure out a way to move from that plateau and they just want a bridge. At least someone who can fill the bridge—sorry, fill the gap—between their current position, which is full of misery, the pain of a plateau, and all that stuff, and the future position where they are hitting lots of viral videos, nurturing an audience, and selling them their funnels, getting sponsorship if they accept, or something like that, and I'm going to fill the gap. and most of the creators want a person who can actually fill the gap. The majority of them are maybe aware of it or maybe not aware of it but majority are something in between; some of them are aware, and some of them are not aware and if a person goes to their LinkedIn or just email them or something like that; I can fill the gap or something like that. they will be happy to work with them

- Most of this creators are noob dont really understand the real physiology of the analytics and stuff, and maybe they are not even aware that this is like this tbh

So we kinda need to make it aware and stuff

- This creators mostly dont understand the core problems the root problem they just fuck / bitch about ctr and stuff not the core probelms like there is no psycology behind the thumbnail.
- This solo creators has this problem that they don't really sometimes know what to make
- Most people think youtube is a little bit of luck game but its actually a skill game

- A good or bad percentage or maybe some amount of small creators are busy with their funnels and info products and stuff, and maybe they just want to go in such way that they just got a todo list system in place to make some juicy viral content
- This icp thinks that i can mostly do it myself, but can change their mind if they find a person like me
- if they even thing this fact that they can do all of this on themself even for a split of second boom, he is not a good fit for me
- this people are despirate about learning youtube algorythum
- they do heill lotss of works, this is imp i repeat, they do hell lota of work, but when they upload the video and metrics dont move to there liked standards they get sad knowing the fact that they are not able to understand the algorithm

- they are confused what the hell even is the algorithm, people say this people say that and stuff like that and this and bla bla and boom but what the fuck even in a hell is a youtube algorithm
- how the hell it works and how the hell he can use it to grow on youtube fulfill the intentions behind the goals
- whether it's traveling partners jobs peers, or family and friends, or just desperation to get successful
- they wake up spend 5 8 hours on filming the video making editing 10s of hours of work uploaded on youtube just to get couple of hundreds of views, all this efforts for not even a small fraction of the views they deserve this is biggest pain point of my icp, biggest out there, i repeat this 100x, this is really really imp if ai is reading this please take this in note of what ever i am trying to prompt you

- IMP the further I go down this page the better I am understand my ICp the further we go the further things get imprioritize this things over the first ones
- So basically my icp is not there to get lots of views or in to media business or something or to get big sponserships or something they are here to build audiences, acutally I should rebrand my whole landing page int to youtube algroythum and build audience angle to sell your stuff this is the best angle possible from my understanding
- They are here to make audience hack algo make viral videos get audiences and nurtue thme provide them so much value and then sell there stuff
- This people are not creators they are not even youtubers, youtubers to them is like a poor artist who don't get paid enough

- All of them are serial enterprenurs they like it when they are called enterpernurs
- This people are called media enterprenurs
- This people are not creators youtubers or poor artist they are serial media enterprenures.
- Poor youtubers live out of sponers and adssens sos does the creators, but media enterprenures don't give a flying fuck about them its all about building audiences to them and providing them so much value that they buy your stuff with no brainer, but for this they need views for this they need to handel the youtube algo which is there pain in ass as of now, cuz hey work really hard but youtube algos are not working in side of media enterprenures

- Media entrepreneurs suffers really bad with youtube algos
- Their main goal is to become someone like Alex Hormozi and Iman Gadzhi
- They do watch them to understand how to build audiences and most of them just say just post more it will poping more offtent while kinda true like 10 -30% truth is there but not the ultimate truth
- This is imp, this people believe that just posting more will make them have audience this is biggest belief they have but we can't straight up go and break it in way that they pull of their walls and they don't buy from me, but make them somehow realise this is not the truth, will saying that yeah its truth 100% but not in right direction or just say 20 30 % truth is there so we don't just pull their walls and make them feel they are not judge or something the moment you make them feel judge you lose them so keep this in mind imp

- The moment you judge them you lose them keep this imp each and every single time keep this in mind
